There are six movements of great diversity. In the andante larghetto, e staccato the orchestral ritornellos with their dotted rhythms alternate with the virtuoso passages for upper strings and solo first violin. During the following years he continued to develop the form, chiefly on biblical subjects but with an occasional excursion into the mythological. An introductory six bar largo precedes the fourth movement, a long andante in Italian concerto form which forms the centre Concerto Grosso No. 12 in F Major the concerto. Despite being fugal in nature, it does not adhere to the strict rules of counterpoint, surprising the listener instead with ingenious episodes, alternating between the ripieno and concertino; at the close, where a bold restatement of the theme would be expected, Handel playfully curtails the movement with two pianissimo bars.
