It is because people on the left are willing to call out such behaviour by members of the dominant social or economic group that they receive criticism from those people who are not used to being criticised or held to account. It is the opium of the people. Those siding with Plantinga argue in essence that unless an exclusivist must acknowledge on epistemic grounds that are or should be accepted by all rational people that those holding incompatible beliefs are actually on equal footing, the exclusivist can justifiably deny that this is so and thus need not engage in belief assessment Kim
