From Out of the Flames by Dave Hammer

Has anyone read Nancy and Lawrence Goldstone's books about books? I am reading Out of The Flames and like it a lot, nearly two thirds of the way thru the story switches from Servetus's life to the fate of his books. Lawrence Goldstone is the author of fourteen books of both fiction.

Out of the Flames is an extraordinary story - providing testament to the power of ideas, the enduring legacy of books, and the triumph of individual.

This is a story of survival. "From the embers healing was found. A spark was ignited and love was born. Out of the flames redemption was won".

The "Fearless Scholar" of "Out of the Flames" is the 16th-century Spanish physician, philosopher and mystical theologian Michael Servetus.

To him, the idea was a non sequitur, a contrivance no better than a slight-of-hand card trick. This will be your only warning. The Goldstones offer both a portrait of an important but neglected Renaissance humanist and a testimony to the power of books to shape minds and hearts. I particularly liked the last part of the text which involves the incredible story of the survival of the last three copies of the Christianismi Restitutio, including Calvin's copy.
