Now liked their loved homes like the wars ; and as a tire upon
A huge wood, on the heights of hills, that far off hurls his light, So the divine brass shined on these, thus thrusting on for fight. I learned the wisdoms of their souls, and humours of their blood ; For when the Trojan council met and these together stood, By height of his broad shoulders had Atrides eminence, Yet, set, Ulysses did exceed, and bred more reverence.
