Who is the Speaker? They'll stay close through the weekend. Robinson's poem "Luke Havergal" -- though I'm not the only baffled one. No, though I was honoured to be able to present some of the public and school talks. Whatever the Speaker intends for Luke, it is obviously not for the young man's good, and will, most likely, end in his own death, whether deliberately, by his own hand, or in conflict with a rival, or in a delirium caused by sickness.

An example of this is that the two times in the poem that he makes a reference to a physics have the easy part: Was he the husband, or just the lover, of the woman for whose call he is supposed to listen?
